

To Whom It May Concern,

I am pleased to recommend Allison Offer, who served as a Project Lead during her time with Clarity Ventures. In this role, Allison brought a valuable combination of technical development experience and project management leadership, allowing her to contribute meaningfully both to the work being delivered and to the organization and communication required to move complex projects forward.

One of Allison's greatest strengths is her organization and sense of ownership. She consistently approached her responsibilities thoughtfully and methodically, keeping track of project details, priorities, dependencies, and next steps while ensuring that both her teammates and clients had a clear understanding of where things stood. Her technical background also gave her the ability to understand challenges at a deeper level and effectively bridge the gap between development teams, project requirements, and client expectations.

Allison was also someone who was willing to lean in when a project needed additional attention. She did not limit herself to the minimum requirements of her role; when challenges arose or additional effort was necessary to help a project succeed, she was willing to put in the work, collaborate with the team, and help find a path forward. That willingness to take ownership and remain engaged through difficult or complicated situations made her a valuable member of our project teams.

Just as importantly, Allison worked extremely well with clients. She brought patience, professionalism, and grace to client interactions, including situations that required navigating technical complexity, changing requirements, or difficult project conversations. She was able to communicate clearly without losing sight of the relationship behind the project, and I consistently appreciated the care she brought to representing both our team and our clients' interests.

Allison's combination of technical knowledge, organizational ability, work ethic, and client-facing professionalism would make her an asset to any organization looking for someone capable of operating effectively across both technical and project leadership responsibilities. I am happy to recommend her and am confident that she will bring the same level of commitment and professionalism to her future opportunities.

Sincerely,

Micki Cascio
